

About the Website...

Guess What I Learned started as a website that existed only in my imagination.

I created it for Brandi.

As I began writing The Brandi Series, Brandi kept learning things and writing thousand-word essays about them. I loved the essays, but I quickly discovered a problem.

- Putting them inside the books kept interrupting the story.
- I didn't want to lose them.

So I had an idea.

What if I built Brandi's website for real?

That's how Guess What I Learned went from being part of Brandi's fictional world to becoming the website you're visiting now.

Here, all those essays Brandi wrote have somewhere to live.

Brandi's library is organized the same simple way she eventually organizes it in the books:

People. Places. Things.

If she learns about a person, it goes under People.

If she learns about a place, it goes under Places.

Everything else?
Apparently, it's a Thing.

It isn't an elaborate filing system.
Fortunately, it doesn't need to be.

You don't have to read the books to explore the library, and you don't have to visit the library to understand the books.

But if you enjoy both, they fit together.

The books tell Brandi's personal story.

The library tells you what Brandi learned.

Every person. Every place. Everything. Every story has a lesson.
